

---

Subject: Hints from the Kitty herself ;)

Posted by Anonymous on Thu, 29 Aug 2002 05:28:00 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Thanks for welcoming me back. And yes I would consider using an aimbot cheating, even though everyone has the ability to download it. Why? you ask, well for one thing aimbots are programs that are integrated or augmented into the game. Second its not part of the game, and wasn't meant to be tweaked. Thrid you complain about skins which are visible? Westwood gave a contest about making skins, all be it a false contest but one none the less. Westwood fully endorses the changing of skins. Does this then mean that people cheat when they turn their screens up brighter in order to see things which they normally would not in dark spaces? Or does this then mean that people with more expensive vid cards and sound cards now hav an advantage and therefor are not allowed to use them? Of course this doesn't mean their cheating, but their still getting an edge above their opponents. What about switching to third person during the game to see around corners? I'm chaning a view to my advantage is this then cheating? Does this skin decloak the steath units? No it doesn't so anyone who can use a stealth tank or infantry should be fine. The fact is, is that youre upset because you've had to upgrade your skills while using a stealth unit. Many of my skins are true to life camo's and its extrememly hard to spot enemy infantry or vehicles but I don't complain. Am I justified in going up to the person who made this skin and telling him it made the game harder? No I'm not, but over time I've been able to improve skills on searching for and aiming at these units. So don't complain whether you like it or not the skins are here to stay. So you might as well just get used to it and learn how to deal with it.

---