I actually disagree in part. Defensive players on the whole, for example, tend to have very few kills but lots of deaths from apc rushing, getting sniped while they're repairing tanks in teh field, or any other some such thing. Kill to death ratio, I think, means next to nothing. It just shows that you can stay alive, or how good you are individually, not how good you are at being on a team. I think to determine how good someone is, you've got to look at lots of factors, not just one or two. But that's pretty obvious.
