

---

Subject: Renegade vs. Real World

Posted by Anonymous on Mon, 10 Jun 2002 18:42:00 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

quote:Originally posted by Chronigan:I just have to open my mouth. Yes there are people in America who helped fund the ira and yes a lot of Americans do not know the problems of the rest of the world. The difference between a terrorist and a general is which side you are on. The British considered Washington a terrorist and the Americans considered him a great general and elected him president. As for America not caring, That is not so if you tell any American about any of the problems in this world every single one of them will care. What are we supposed to do? For instance we could easily take over India and Pakistan occupy them and destroy any and all weapons. Some in the world would think that is good, we helped stop a possible nuclear war. But to India and Pakistan we would be tyrannical bullies. To quote Spiderman "With great power comes great responsibility", just because we could eradicate all life on the planet does not mean we should. So what would be a fair and equitable solution to solve all the world's problems? Tell me and I will vote for it. Until then the United States will have to sit on the sidelines nervously hoping people will be able to put aside their differences, open their minds, forget old wounds and compromise. Then, hopefully everybody will be able to enjoy the freedom that Americans cherish so much. P.S. I know there are spelling errors. This guy is right it's not America's job to police the world. It's not our duty to stop the fighting every time some hot-headed ass holes decide to start something.

---