I noticed that in some games that I play people don't seem to want to work together as a team at all and instead just do their own things and don't really care about winning or losing. It kind of disturbs me because I thought that this was the kind of game where teamwork was emphasized and the only time you can destroy a base by yourself is if you are playing against computer opponents. I know that games are supposed to be fun and far be it from me to tell someone how to play the game. If someone wants to be a sniper with four mammoths rushing the base and the Airstrip destroyed then so be it if that kind of thing floats your boat. I just thought that I'd see a little more actual teamwork when the game came out than there is now, and I guess I'm disappointed because I was hoping to see communication in each match and tactics and strategies brewing on both sides to make the game more interesting, sigh oh well.
