This is the first time I've posted on this thread, and to tell you the truth, C4Kitty, the game ISN'T about points. It's about finding new things, constantly changing your gameplay. Sure, your * cheap tactics pump out the high scores. But honestly, doesn't it get a little boring? TRY different stuff, DO different stuff, give TEAMWORK a chance. And about when you were taking on those 4 flame tanks in the med. tank, were you doing it for the team, or were you doing it for your points, and it just HAPPENED to save the team? I was a newb, and people HELPED me. That's why I HELP other newbies. If things like this never happened, there would be a bunch of suck-ass players and a bunch of elite super-players controlling the game. It's easy to beat the crap out of a newb, it's easy to put them down and tell them to shut up, but that will just lead to cheaters because the newbs are fed up with no one helping them. Someone told me YOU were bug-abusing, C4Kitty. I know bugs are fun to use, but really, that's just not right. That's pretty close to cheating, too. I have no idea how you could be engaged, or whatever. You're the worst person with the worst attitude in the world, and the most dishonest player on Renegade, and no one could ever like you. The fact that you play constantly adds to the fact that I think you are lying about your boyfriend, unless he's Havoc or Mobius or something. That's like those poor boys who have a crush on Lara Croft from Tomb Raider. Pitiful. Anyway, to finish my post, I just want to point out that you REALLY need help. Psychiatric help. You need therapy. You don't seem to have many friends, if you're not a team player. And finally: EVER WONDER WHY YOU'RE SO *ED IN THE HEAD? Because you are a redneck hillbilly who happens to have a computer in your cardboard house, with your beautiful husband, a rabid chihuahua. The End.
