I don't think you understood what I said. The people I work with don't care for the current American administration. Evil is a tad harsh, but it certainly isn't likable. I agree with them.

It is pure ignorance to say or think that Americans don't dismiss Canada in many instances. While this doesn't necessarily mean "evil", I'm going to stretch that definition as broad as possible. The number of times Canada has actually been commended by American people I know I could count on my hands. I've kept fairly silent on the issue because I can usually take a joke, but what you've just said is just blantant lies.

I suggest you tell your government to stop thinking that whatever you do is good, legal, moral, glorious, just, whatever. And I desperately hope you go away from this knowing that the surrounding world doesn't necessarily like the people you have representing your country. It's not propaganda that sways their opinion, it's fact.
