warrantoOh, one more thing. Is this the vote that you said never happened?

Quote:Divergent views were expressed by the representatives of the United States, United Kingdom and Spain, which had tabled a further resolution on the situation on 7 March containing a deadline of Monday, 17 March, for Iraq's full compliance. Failing to win the necessary support for the draft in the Council and amid the threat of a veto by a permanent member, the three announced on Monday that they would not put it to a vote

If so, that "vote that never happened" was to set the "full compliance" for that monday. Nothing about attacking Iraq or not.

If I'm mistaken, please point out where I could find the answer to what you mean.

As it says, it never happened. They were going to vote to go to Iraq.

France was going to vote No. They were the only one voting no they had the Veto power. So out of the 7 or so that mattered. Only 1 was going to vote no.

In the UN Majority does not rule.

And as I have said before. The war is not illegal. In no way has it ever been illegal. Every thing you have said does not make it illegal.

Besides, why are you so agaisnt this war? What is your reasoning.

Don't say casualties, or terrorist attacks. We knew those were going to happen. Everyone knew that was going to happen. The fact is less happened than people thought were going to happen. People were saying thousands of American soldiers will die and hundreds of thousands of Iraqis will be killed. Well it isn't even close to that. And when you do get rid of a government in a country you will always have people that do not like that. No matter who you take out of power or what country you are going into what is going on in Iraq is what has happened every time anyone has done something like this. And every time we have replaced their style of government the country becomes much better for it.
