I see.. thanks for the advice.. I totally forgot that I wasn't personally involved at all.. glad you reminded me..

Umbral_DelaFlare, you're right.. it is "sketchy at best".. but you have to admit that the story is a beauty. A chick who has an online relationship with someone, tells us (not them directly) that she just came down with lung cancer and has to go to the hospital tomorrow for a "live or die" surgery. The next day, (and for a week or so) her sister tells us that she died in the surgery, sorry for your loss, have a nice day.. for the next 3 weeks, three different accounts with the same IP as Lynne played on my server, logged in to my forums, etc.. We even subscribed to the vital statistics mail lists for Alberta, just to see when her name came across them; never did.. We even had a side joke in our admin group of "wait 6 months, she'll be back".. imagine our surprise about 5-6 months later when lynne magically appears from a vacation at her grandmothers house in seattle, where she was forbidden to use the internet; only to come home and find out that her sister was having a secret syber-sex affair with another community member, and was jealous of all her attention.. so as she was "recovering" from her surgery, she conveniently killed her off, and went about her business.. "Lets just forget about all that, I'm back now, okay"..

yea.. lol, "sketchy at best".. You honestly have no idea how many conversations we all had, how many posts I had backed her up on when people started calling her a liar earlier that summer, etc.. then I get a colostomy bag tossed in my lap.. you could say I was a little bitter about it all, I guess.
