
Subject: The Ultimate Iraq War thread

Posted by warranto on Tue, 31 Aug 2004 01:56:26 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

NodbuggerDaveGMMOk then, let's revert to the logic of that statement.

I declare that it is now legal to smoke weed anywhere you like anywhere in the world.

Me saying so doesn't make it so.

Now, try and figure out how that refers to your post.

You do not get it.

You cannot enforce anything. Only the UN can. They have not said it was illegal. They know what we did and I don't think they are discussing its legality.

That fact of the matter is the UN, who according to you is in charge, has never said it was illegal, ever. So until they say it is illegal it is legal.

Your little weed analogy makes no sense. If the police said smoking weed is OK then it becomes OK. You however are not the police so you can eat shit and die for being so stupid.

No one said it was illegal? Really now...

Kofi Annan thinks otherwise

Quote:....Question: There are critics in the Middle East who are very strongly criticizing the United Nations, first, for in their eyes legitimizing the results of an illegal war -- which you yourself described as illegal -- in resolution 1483 (2003)....

regardless, incase you haven't figured it out, IGNORANCE IS NO EXCUSE FOR BREAKING THE LAW. It does not matter if no one told them the act was illegal, the law says that it is illegal, therefor it is illegal, regardless of the perpetrator being told or not.

How hard is that to understand?
