I started junior year two weeks ago, and it is by far the hardest year of school I have ever taken. EVER.

Anyway, don't concern yourself over your image, or what strangers in there think of you. Friends are gained by them knowing and liking your personality, not the image you convey.

Shyness is frowned upon in high school, but don't worry about it too much. I've found out that just by keeping your mouth shut and listening to people introduce themselves to others, you can find out more about them, and then, when they decide to talk to you, they don't have to go through the process of introducing themselves.

And the most important thing of all: RELAX. This isn't the ultimate test to see if you will succeed or fail in life, so just roll with the punches and try to play the cards of Fate the best you can. Just be yourself.
