
Subject: Canadians who want to join the USA and form a US of N.A

Posted by Incognito on Mon, 27 Sep 2004 17:15:03 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

icedog90It's so sad how so many idiots on these forums are against America. Including seeing some retard in a different thread saying that calling someone an American is an "insult". What the fuck are you guys smoking? You're against us even though we haven't done anything to you, and you're looking down upon us like as if we were a bundle of shit bags who didn't even deserve to be a country.

I agree with you. We fought for our Independence and damn well like it. Many Americans are bigots, that's true, but the rest of the world are idiots for believing that being called an "American" is an insult. As far as I'm concerned, most of the hatred is just jealousy. You wouldn't have a problem with us if you actually tried to be good allies. (This, of course, is directed toward those AGAINST America. I'm not trying to say that every non-American is anti-America.)

icedog90Also, hearing Aprime say it wouldn't be bad to "share" money with America really resembles some more faggotry.

This I don't agree with. There would be nothing wrong with sharing the same money system. Instead of a product being $2.99 USD and $3.99 CAN, why can't it be adjusted to $2.99 period? I suggest we'd keep it American because of the higher level of difficulty it would be for Americans to shift for a few reasons (not because I'm American). 1. More population in America, meaning more people would have to adjust. 2. Americans are stubborn and are not easily moved to change. 3. Larger circulation of US currency throughout the world.
