In your opinion, don't pass that off as fact. Some people go into it for different reasons. I figure as a liberal you'd have known this but apparently you're not as open minded as you'd like people to believe.

That's REAL ORIGINAL BUDDY! I have to hand it to you, you beat me there! I'm having a hard time composing myself through all the crying I've been through because of an idiot on the Internet who somehow correlates a sense of humor with passing the senior year in high school for any reason!

I don't know why I keep saying this but I dropped out because I hated the school I was at and I couldn't stand the mindless drone behavior of people there, along with the various idiots who plagued the populace of the school system and undoubtedly still do.

Yet, amazingly enough, for dropping out I happen to be able to do a great many things that you don't seem to be capable of. Making sense, for one. Writing in legible English, for the second point. Third? I'm not an idiot, but you happen to be one. A high school diploma means nothing in the real world anyway, as experience shows. Employment depends on your skill set and abilities, not "well I made it through high school" - that doesn't guarantee intelligence or ability to work.
