

---

Subject: Kerry did it again...

Posted by Fabian on Fri, 01 Oct 2004 02:40:09 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Some notes I took:

When they shook hands, Kerry looked a lot more comfortable than Bush.

I may have missed it, but I don't think the words "flip" or "flop" were ever explicitly used. Kudos to Bush! However, Bush sounded like a broken record, repeating the same phrases over and over again. Kerry did too, but not as badly.

When asked if they thought there would be an increased risk of attack during the upcoming election, both COMPLETELY ignored the question and rambled on about Iraq.

Bush seemed to have trouble keeping up with Kerry as far as rebuttles go. Both, at one point or another, mispoke and mixed up Saddam and bin Laden (they corrected themselves, though). Wow! It's almost as if, thanks to a certain president, people now associate the two, even though they are unrelated!

Kerry finished his speeches VERY strongly. Bush either didn't use all of his time, or used too much and ended up going over the limit or speaking very quickly at the end.

NBC seemingly broke the rules the most.

I've always agreed with Kerry's stances on Iraq, but I don't know enough of the logistics about Korea to know who to agree with. My verdict? I think Kerry won, but that may be because I've already decided that I'm voting for him.

71% of people on an NBC poll say Kerry won.

---