The question was about job loss. Cheney said that in order to help people get jobs they wanted to make sure they were more educated. Hence the education reference. It WAS relevant and Edwards was just trying to make him look like an ass.

When Edwards was asked how they expect to get more allies on their side after France and Germany already said that they aren't going to send troops if Kerry gets elected, Edwards NEVER answered the question and went around the answer about allies entirely.

Edwards broke the rules twice in that question, interrupted Cheney at least twice, and ripped a piece of paper while Cheney was talking. Not cool.

The reason Cheney didn't counter-respond is because he and the President do not see eye to eye on the matter of gay marriage. He explained what he believes is not what the president believes, but he stands by the President. Edwards gave he and Kerry's position, Cheney declined to argue it because he wasn't in disagreement.
