

---

Subject: Bush: Pre-Senile Dementia?

Posted by Hydra on Tue, 12 Oct 2004 04:45:50 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

This whole thread can be summed up into one word: crap.

Being president of the most powerful nation in the world is a much more demanding job than being a state governor. The President was not going to be as quick on his feet as usual since he could fall asleep from fatigue at any time.

I can't believe you would even think that was a radio receiver on his back. Who in their right mind puts a radio receiver on the President's back in plain view of a camera? Use your head, SuperFlyingEngi. No one in politics is that stupid.

I can't believe you're actually making an issue out of this, SuperFlyingEngi. About the only thing you have on Nodbugger is your use of proper grammar (most of the time). At least he makes arguments about real issues, and they make sense (most of the time). You, on the other hand, choose to make an issue about what Bush had on his back during a debate and whether or not he is suffering from a brain disorder as if there's anything to debate about (for assholes who will say, "You're right, he obviously IS suffering from a debilitating brain disorder," there is nothing to debate about because he IS NOT suffering from presenile dementia).

---