Subject: a few questions - props if you can answer 'em
Posted by bahn on Sat, 11 Dec 2004 15:14:46 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

WeirdoThe reason it is no open source is simple. If it was open source. People with a bit of programming skills, would just edit the program in such a way that it wouldn't scan your files for hacks, but simply connect to the network.

Now why don't you Download it? I've heared about many people who don't want to download it. But still download a lot of other programs from the internet. If you use a file-sharing program you are in a way bigger risk of virusses and other bad software. I really think it's strange people complain about this program possibly containing virusses while 75% of there software isn't bought.

I realize it would make it easier to build "hacks" to avoid it, 99% of the time the only time hack's are used is 13 year olds (who have no programming experience) that just want to PWN. That's just my opinion though.

As for the software thing. I don't download third party software. The only open port's on my network have a 1.5mbit encrypted key challenge.

Thank's for the replies.