Do it! Even IF all intelligent users used other browsers, you'd be mighty stupid to go after 5% of a market when 95% are left out in the cold along with their cash.

The only reasons things sometimes don't display correctly in Firefox is because of sloppy coding. Make your site compatible with the W3C standards and all browsers can read them fine. Your options then boil down to:

A: make site compatible with 95% of your customers' browsers

B: make site compatible with 100% of your customers' browsers
