of course I knew of 1984, but as I was in a more advanced composition class, and i didnt have to read it, thus I didnt. So i guess being of the more intelligent portion of my class hindered my learning in that department. Anyway, in an attempt to stop this topic from spiralling into a Revolution discussion, I wont reply to that Umbra.

however SEAL, 700,000 is just as bad as one million dont you think. Quoting Red Alert: If you kill one, it is a tragedy, if you kill one million, it is a statistic. In this case its a statistic and 700,000 or one million, it is still a personal holocaust that sadaam was running. And Osama did not need funding, your right there Umbra, but how about the Taliban? Running an army of that size for that long while supplying them with explosives and weapons costs a pretty penny on the Black Market where the prices are even more steep.

While I agree that Blockading France would not be tolerated by the masses of nations, I also believe they need to be more under control. Because as of now, they have done nothing but try to hinder us when it comes to the war on terror, and allies dont do that. Personally, I think It would be better if the US attempted to drop out of the UN and take Britain, Australia, and the rest of the coalition of the willing with us. If that were possible of course. Also, I think attempting to set up an alliance with China would be a great asset, because all regimes come to a sunset. And to tell you the truth, the next one will be China unless the US toughens up as a nation.
