j_ball430Yay, and you ignored the rest of my post that proves that statement true. Congratulations for missing the point!

Spoony even agrees as to what I said. Why? Because it's truth. Something you democrats will never understand.

You didn't PROVE anything. Giving a few reasons why YOU think they are different doesn't prove it.

"I don't exactly see how they were terrorists. They were resistance fighters. They were organized, and were fighting Germans for their country. They took risks in order to help free their country. That's just a LITTLE different from the radicals we're fighting now. Don't you think?"

The terrorists in Iraq are resistance fighters. They are an organized entity, or at least as organized as they are capable of being. They are fighting American's for their country (their perspective). They are taking risks in order to free their country (again, their persepective). Calling a group resistance fighters or freedom fighters vs. terrorists is just a way of making them look better or worse.

I did read your entire post, and I understood your point. I still disagree with it. Don't jump to conclusions.

Democrats will never understand the truth? Fuck you. Uncalled for and false.

Quote:no countries have the gonads to try and hurt america after 9/11. We proved that we wont be dicked around with. And supporting French Resistance against our enemy the Axis was not supporting terrorism as the Nazis outstepped their bounds. Your an idiot if you think otherwise. nuff said.

The idea that Germany was overstepping it's bounds (while a very popular one) depended on what perspective you were looking at the situation with. Many other people and nations see the United States as overstepping its bounds.
