
Subject: What the "left" thinks of the "red states&quo
Posted by Crimson on Fri, 21 Jan 2005 02:01:22 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

You are a FOOL, a FOOL I tell ya! If a corporation doesn't have MONEY, then they CAN'T PAY THEIR WORKERS! You think anyone can just form a corporation, hire 20,000 people, and they all sit on their asses and do nothing and just collect big dollars from the government? Do you know NOTHING about economics? Or do you know only "BIG CORPORATION BAD! ME WANT DINNER!"

I work for a large corporation myself. A corporation so large that it once had a larger market cap than Microsoft a few years ago. My paycheck is directly derived from the success of my work. People higher up make money based on their decisions and the ability to manage effectively. A company grows by successfully filling a need and being paid to fulfill that need by other companies or end consumers. When people do their job well, the company makes more money which means they can do more things, expand their market, fulfill needs for more people, research new and innovative ideas... did I say HIRE MORE PEOPLE? When a company does a bad job, when they are not fulfilling a need, the company shrinks, jobs are lost. How many people do you think Haliburton hired to do the work over in Iraq? Do you think they just stopped fulfilling their other obligations with the rest of their customers and sent the existing employees over there? C'mon... think about it, ok?
