You know... I could be wrong, but most businesses are in business to do business.. you know, that act which makes money.

If you want a service.. and even "more" of a service than the typical service providers provide, why are you afraid to pay for it?

I pay $30 a year for every domain I own.. godaddy's only charging like $15, and that's WITH the aliased info option.

I can understand if you simply don't have money.. I'm just saying that "shit costs money".. and you have to work around that little inconvenience sometimes.
