

---

Subject: Survival kits?

Posted by Javaxcx on Wed, 26 Jan 2005 01:35:51 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

AircraftkillerIt's not a law. Nations cannot answer to other nations, because then they lose their individual power.

Wrong! Any nation can choose to leave the U.N. at any time and go on their little wars however they want to "legally." You WILLINGLY gave up your legal power to unilaterally (not true for this specific case as there was more than just America who invaded) invade another country. Don't like it? Pay your dues that you haven't bothered to pay, and leave.

But let's play your game for a moment. It's not a law-- but wait. Then what does that signature mean saying you'll play by those rules? Hmm... A formal contract? I'm pretty sure it's against your own law to violate a contract. That's not pulling an argument out of my ass, that's applying your own laws (like you seem to be intent on doing) on the international playground [which, back in reality, legally you cannot]).

Quote:Nowhere in the UN charter does it say that we cannot go to war if we feel we need to, which is outlined in the framework of this nation - the leaders are to protect America and American interests and we do not need permission from anyone to do it. Otherwise we wouldn't have signed the UN charter if it took military power from us.

Wrong again! Chapter 1 and Chapter 7 of the Charter outline you cannot do this. However, chapter 7 outlines a justification for doing this. Just FYI, Iraq didn't meet those conditions-- not even remotely.

Quote:A crime is a crime, you're right... But this isn't a crime,

Except you can't prove it

---