He "tricked" his other self/personality/whatever into thinking that he was fatally shot. His other self assumed there would be a gaping hole through his head, so we see that from his other self's point of view. But in reality he only shot himself in the mouth. He says what's that smell because he is in shock over having been shot, and smells the gunsmoke from the shot. His other self, having been tricked into thinking he was fatally shot, had no choice but to die. Once he "died", he was free of that part of himself (Tyler).

It's similar to that movie The Cage, where by drowning the young innocent boy version of the older evil guy, the evil guy dies.

Kind of confusing I know
