

---

Subject: Capital Punishment Views??

Posted by liberator on Sat, 29 Jan 2005 18:52:03 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

The big problem with sentencing someone to death is that they usually live longer than the average lifer. There should be a maximum timespan on death penalty appeals, say about 2 years. If they can't be proven innocent of the crime in that period of time then it's their tough luck. Also, the methods of execution have gotten as soft as the fat cat lawyers. A person guilty of brutally murdering another person or persons should be either hung (preferably in public, and before you ask there are methods of hanging that are instant), electrocuted, or gas chambered. These methods are not overly inhumane and are violent enough for the families of the victims to get some sense of revenge from the whole thing.

---