IRON-FARTFirst of all, I didn't make many mistakes.

Putting an extra apostrophe where it doesn't belong doesn't make me illiterate. Its just a simple mistake.

That "simple" mistake is worse than any of the mistakes I made in this topic. Before you begin correcting me on little things, you should first learn how to say "it's" correctly.

just a tid-bit of information here,

its= possessive form of the pronoun "it".

it's= contraction of the words "it is".

Two completely different words. It has nothing to do with grammar, and everything to do with using the correct word where it is supposed to be used.

You wouldn't say go left, have someone drive over a cliff, then make an inference that it doesn't matter that you mean right. Two different words used for two different meanings.

Read Warranto's quote, I think he explained it perfectly for me. Meaning, it's not a simple mistake.

It's IRON-FART's decision to either let the topic go back to its original state or to keep replying with more things that I can easily defend.
