Well what people say these things are used for is to get people to admit to things. Even if they didn't do them. The guy obviously cannot get the death penalty under any law. So if he knew saying he was a terrorist would have gotten him off with a lighter sentence than why didn't he just say it then come his time in court he can change his mind. Could it be he was a terrorist? And denying he was going to do these things to his enemies took away the point of being one?

No, he was just a poor SOB trying to save his own ass, but got killed doing it. If you were picked up and interrogated, would you admit to something you didn't do? Now don't get me wrong, I'm not saying that he was a terrorist. We don't know that.

Quote:

Being tortured ,didn't he die as he wanted to, a martyr?

- A. How do you know he wanted to die?
  - B. How do you know he would have died for religious beliefs?
  - C. Use "Martyrs" carefully. That implies heroism. Some people obviously see terrorists as freedom fighters etc, whereas some see them as power hungry rebels.
  - D. Calling him a martyr implies that he was a terrorist, but we don't know if he is one.
