If you have a dynamic IP, turn off your DSL/Cable modem and wait a little bit. Your IP will probably change and you can shake him that way. If you have a static IP, call your ISP and ask them to change it because someone is spamming you via IP.

This should shake him off your tail. If I were you, I'd message him back saying "Please stop spamming me!," AFTER I changed my IP adress, just to waste his time while I play a nice game of Renegade.

Think about how he could have gotten your IP adress though. Were you in a Teamspeak server or IRC server? Could this person have been an admin on that server and found out your IP?
