

---

Subject: Schiavo Situation

Posted by SuperFlyingEngi on Mon, 28 Mar 2005 16:00:01 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

cowmisfit

Like it or not, the goverment and the republicans are not out to get you, your dad however is out to ruin your life and turn you into a evil monstor with no value for human life enless of course its a terrorist or dog, then GO SAVE THEM!!!

You're a funny kid.

cowmisfit.....I don't even know what to say to this. This is by far the stupidest statement I've ever had the displeasure of reading.

This all started with the malpractice lawsuit filed against the doctor who let Schiavo kill herself, and when the parents didn't get any money from the suit, they started all this.

cowmisfitYou are a sick fuck. Not morally wrong eh? Ever seen someone starve to death?

A body without a mind, you idiot. You really didn't glean that from the context?

cowmisfitBut my dad, but my dad said this, but my dad said this. Your dad is an idiot. Your supposed to be the "awww we're killing innocent civilians" fucktard, and now look. Its an innocent american and your saying "ah w/e its not wrong to me, stave her."

There's nothing to suffer from a bunch of cells being starved. Terri Schiavo no longer has a brain to suffer with.

- By the way -

Did you all know that George Bush signed a law in Texas that allowed hospitals to pull the plug on patients like Terri Schiavo if the patient's insurance runs out?

The hypocrisy never ends...

atrios.com

George Bush signed the law which allows the hospitals to make this decision:

A patient's inability to pay for medical care combined with a prognosis that renders further care futile are two reasons a hospital might suggest cutting off life support, the chief medical officer at St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital said Monday.

Dr. David Pate's comments came as the family of Spiro Nikolouzos fights to keep St. Luke's from turning off the ventilator and artificial feedings keeping the 68-year-old grandfather alive.

St. Luke's notified Jannette Nikolouzos in a March 1 letter that it would withdraw life-sustaining care of her husband of 34 years in 10 days, which would be Friday. Mario Caba-Illero, the attorney representing the family, said he is seeking a two-week extension, at minimum, to give the man more time to improve and to give his family more time to find an alternative facility.

The Bill (Search for section 166.044)

Apparently, this is a matter of principle for the GOP.

---