They can easily have their systems automatically filter out emails with keyword related to Renegade. I don't think you understand how small scale this would be. There are 4500+ users on this forum. About 3000 have any posts at all. God knows how many of them are active and would have seen this.

I have a friend who opened both WOL and GSA to count how many players are in game... There were 120 on GSA and about 600 on WOL. That was at one time. So lets say there are about quadruple that many people playing Renegade regularly, that would be 2800 people. If all those people spammed EA, (and that is being optimistic) do you think they would still care?

EA has thousands and thousands of people playing other games. Renegade is a very small minority. I'm sure EA recieve emails from people in the Renegade community regularly anyway. Why is it that for 3 years they haven't done shit to improve the game? Why would they start now?

Spam them all you like, but you'd just be wasting your time.

And by the way, people from the community have asked for access to the server many many times over, but EA didn't give it. They have said it was because they don't have access to it or that it is against their policy, blah blah.
