deadfivel am currently running Windows XP with service pack 2. The main problem is that Windows XP is hogging all my RAM. I ran msconfig and unchecked a bunch of the start up programs and services. It is still hogging all my RAM. I have 256 MB of RAM, and plan to get more. But in the meantime, how can I free up most of my RAM? And also, what else can I do to "improve" the speed/performance of Windows XP? I am getting a 128 MB Xstacy graphics card and that should help a bit. But as I said I need to free up my RAM and improve the speed/performance of Windows XP. A little help or advice would be great. Thanks. Going from 256 ram to 512 is like the biggest step of your life.
