Actually, the words that I do know in Spanish I can type, except for the accents, I can't ever figure out how to type those, I know you press alt and then numbers on the num-pad for the different accented letters and other characters, but I can't ever seem to remember what they are. Then again I could always go into word and insert the different special caracters, but it's always easier just to print the paper or whatever I'm working on then add in the accents by hand.

Also, common words should not be mis-spelt. I corrected him because he should learn how to spell common words properly, even if English isn't his first language. If you don't take the time to even attempt to spell things properly then that's pretty stupid. I never said that typing English properly determines how smart a person is. However, like I said before mis-spelling common words is stupid. People do it all the time, even when they do know English and it is extremely annoying. Yes, you have every right to type however you want, but mis-spelling common words is as I said before stupid. I only care about common words really, I don't care if you can't spell stuff like dictionary, discussion or other semi-large words, but mis-spelling a word like you, or are is just, well. . . stupid. BTW I do jerk off to correcting people's spelling mistakes.
