Subject: Do You Think Fighting For President Bush Is Worth Your Life?
Posted by warranto on Thu, 26 May 2005 02:54:35 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

CrimsonwarrantoCrimsonThe War in Iraq IS the War on Terror, thus making this relevant.

However, that still does not mean that Iraq had anything to do with the attack on the world trade center.

That wasn't my point... based on the information available to me, Iraq, as a country, had nothing to do with the attack. Whether Iraq helped harbor those who helped plan or carry out the attack, whether Iraq's government (Saddam) aided and abetted terrorist attacks worldwide, THAT'S the real debate, and THAT'S what I posted a link about.

It's the same logic that says that executing Ted Bundy will stop serial killings. You can't just cut off one higher-up, even all of them. You have to make fundamental changes in the area to stop terrorism from breeding.

Heh, I see the miscommunication then. I'm speaking specifically about the War in Iraq, and your speaking about the broader war on terrorism.

I'm not trying to refute any of that, all I did was point out that Iraq (the government) was not involved with 9/11, All the rest of it is true as far as I'm concerned. Harboring, conspiring, funding, etc. I don't doubt that any of that happened.

If I was mistaken about the purpose of the original topic, as kinghigh1 simply spoke about the losses in the war being 1 in 20 so I assumed that was restricted to what is still happening in Iraq, then I appologise.