Microsoft is on damage control. They're banking on those that lack common sense and who are extremely gullible (Lol, looks like it worked.). What you need to realize is, there is no way for Microsoft to actually know any of the comparisons and graphs in that article, they don't have the PS3 there with them, they can't run tests/comparisons with something they don't have.

If Microsoft did have a (very early) PS3 there to test, there'd be bigger issues, like how they'd be sued to hell and back by Sony.

Which you still fail to do...
