SuperFlyingEngi wrote on Fri, 17 June 2005 15:39Ever heard of Wal-Mart? That's how rich people screw poor people. Taking bigger profits and paying employees less, and cutting benefits, too. The fact that anyone would work at Wal-Mart attests to how poorly our economy is doing lately. I personally abhor shopping at Wal-Mart.

So the way you answer a question challenging your broad statement about all rich people is by going off on a tangent about Wal-Mart... and you expect us to take you seriously?

I'm not asking you how Wal-Mart is screwing poor people (yeah, providing them with a paying job and often-times store discounts is really screwing them over); you said all rich people got rich by screwing over poor people--I'm asking you how.

Are all rich people Wal-Mart execs? No, so your post has little to do with anything we're talking about.

Quit dodging the question and answer it.

How are rich people screwing over poor people?

There's another way.

You sure are wasting a lot of time finding useless graphs and articles that contribute nothing to your point.

We should continue this discussion here instead of further derailing this topic.
