Who cares. They will do what they want. They can patent it and people will comply or not. There'll be people who don't obey it, send smileys like always. Microsoft can go after them or just not care. They are a company and they are doing what companys do. Try to make money. I bet they are just shaking and pulling all their hair out over that lame brain internet petition of 64 odd signatures of people using fake names and proclaiming that they show their emotion in the form of ascii characters.
