Quote:A group of drunks slurring their speech think they're speaking normally to each other. You can't tell left from fucking right when you're high, so you don't think you say stupid shit when you're high, either.

Are you retarded? When I'm drunk, I know damn well that my speech is slurred. You're wrong. Just wrong.

Quote:Wait, I thought giant corporations were evil parasites on society run by vile corporate execs just waiting to smash a few poor people into oblivion for a buck, the most vile kinds of corporations being tobacco companies. When did Marlboro suddenly become the good guy?

Big company, or drug lord. Take your pick. At least a big company would be monitored by the government.

Quote:Also, if you agree that drug lords are an enormous problem in Latin America, why are you doing your part to support them by purchasing their products?

That's why I think it should be legal. Put one and one together for Christ's sake.

Quote:Yeah, you'd know.

I mean, your drug dealer is a trustworthy guy, right?

I've smoked WITH my dealer all the time and I've known him for many years (way before he was even a dealer). He's really friendly and looks out for me all the time. So yes, he is a trustworthy guy. Thanks for asking.

Quote:Oh, of course, because drug dealers are the most careful people in the world! They never use their own product, even when they're mixing it up for someone else!

Drug dealers are just plain ole folks carrying on their family's tradition of breaking the law!

Drug dealing has a good deal of trust involved in it. Dealers want to make money. That's why they do what they do. If they lace their shit, people will be able to tell, and they won't buy from them anymore. No trust = no business = no money. And yes, most drug dealers are very careful. The ones that aren't are usually in jail.

Quote:You say it's not addictive, yet you use it all the time....

Go ahead. You keep telling yourself that if it makes you feel better about your shitty situation.

Hmm... that WOULD be a good point had I actually said that marijuana wasn't addictive.

Quote:I've never known anyone who DIDN'T talk different when they were high. They even have a characteristic look to their faces.

Another point would be the god-awful smell... one of the few things that smell WORSE than cigarettes.

So don't hang out with people who smoke if you don't like what it turns them into. If that person is high in public and you have no choice, then that person would be breaking the law.

Quote:You can bet that the "big tobacco" companies that start making it will add nicotine. Instant addiction. That, combined with the mental effects, will make it worse than tobacco over a short period of time.

I've thought about this a lot, actually. Companies add things to tobacco because smoking tobacco by itself sucks. It's not smooth, it tastes gross, and it does almost nothing to you (for the record, I don't smoke tobacco or like to). Smoking marijuana by itself is just fine--no additives required. People who smoke pot WANT pure pot. If companies started putting other stuff in the pot, people would most likely switch to a pure source (street dealers, or alternative companies).

Let's not forget the millions and millions of dollars that would be saved on FBI and DEA funding. I'm assuming if it were ever to become legal, it would be taxed heavily like alcohol and tobacco, providing even more revenue for the government.
