Yeah, thanks. All because they couldn't hold in their hormones, none of this would of happened with ESRB. Yeah, they changed the rating of San Andreas to AO (Adult Only), but that's not what I really care about right now. In fact, I think Rockstar deserved it. Well, if you take a look at this link and read the news of the site:

<http://www.gtasanandreas.net/news/index.php?vo=39>

This situation is going WAY too far.

Quote:After recent statments from the ESRB stating they wish to see modding for all games stopped, some of us decided it would be a good idea to defend ourselves from the whole "modders are evil" myth they are perpetuating. Namely that we somehow made something so shocking and offensive with Hot Coffee that it undermines their whole rating system, even though they've rated at least a half dozen titles as M which are just as (if not more) explicit than anything in San Andreas; modded or otherwise.

This is completely ridiculous. I seriously feel nervous for the game industry, it's like what Glyde said to me earlier:

GlydeThe gaming industry has come under the political spotlight

It's about time ESRB wakes up and notices that game companies have been getting away with a lot of sexual content, but this is being taken in such a dramatic and political way that I can't even stand it. I seriously do fear for the future of the game industry, all of this happened in a matter of days, and it can easily get a whole lot worse.
