Actually. . .no. . . I like where this topic went. As far as I can tell, Chronojam is speaking up about languages and horrible typographical skills that tie in with such things. And he's right. No matter what country you're from. . .no matter what language you speak. . .using your nationality as an excuse to use "Net Abbreviations," as I call them, is just idiocy. If you're going to give a poor excuse, at least give an honest one. I'm more than willing to accept "im 2 lazy 2 type right" as an excuse. Much as I didn't want to, I got used to the fact that not everyone feels that typing by-the-book is a mandatory skill when dealing with their online peers. I just pray these same people don't think that this "Internet clause" of the written English language(so to speak) applies to everyday life. It's bad enough we have people typing out these things, but then there's the people who actually have the gall to bark out "Arr-oh-eff-ell, gee gee everyone. Gee gee." and things like that over voice chat. What. . .in the Hell? Ya know?

Anyway, before this turns into any more of a wandering rant, I'll shut up.
