Excellent. For the most part, the nine-character limitation isn't that much of a burden considering I grew up in the days of BBSes and AOL v2.0.(Five bucks says you don't know what a "SmallTime BBS" is, Crimmy.) But in the long run, something to the extent of 32 character and special characters allowed(space, underscore, shift-numeric keys. . .) would be nice. Being able to remove nicknames from the database would be nice, too.
