Commando no. 448I said if a party took majority. What if the party's congress members stood united in their stance and declared the use of them. The controllers are trained to obey the order to launch if the order seems authentic. They don't have much say in the matter. Even if but 2 controllers in one facility deem the order valid and decide to go through with it then MAD is almost assured. Only 1 missile would have the world freaking out. Then when retaliatory strikes begin then the other controllers are pretty much forced to follow a MAD order.

Looks like someone has no clue what the hell they're talking about.

There are several people in completely different locations that have to authorize it before the two inside of the control room can launch the ICBM from a silo (which both have individual keys that have to be turned on opposite sides of the room)
