

---

Subject: Re: EA Partners with XWIS Community Service

Posted by spotelmo on Thu, 06 Oct 2005 22:06:05 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

i'm wonderig if this means things like the lobby chat will be turned back on in red alert2 and how much support they will give.

i also wonder if ea is suggesting that they are washing their hands of c&c (even though they state otherwise) or, if this works out, will they continue to make more c&c games(like the rumored redalert 3) my only concern is this responsibility and private information being handed over to a third party. what do we know about this organization? are they accountable for the actions of their employees? what safe guards do they go through to make sure they are hiring only responsible people?

is this just a bunch of online people who have never seen eachother? do they let just anyone join up with no background checks?

i think we've all had experience with people we play with/collaborate with online who seem like upstanding people only to find out later they are really assholes.

when i buy something from ea or contact ea for any reason, i know i am dealing with a corporate entity which i can hold accountable if one of their employees does something illegal or wrong...what such repurcussions are available against these 3rd parties?

---