I already stated that i fully understand it but what is the point of saying it's an addiction if you mean it's psychological and has the exact same meaning if you said it about food. I am just trying to understand why you would bring it up that it is a psychological one when it means nothing in this case. As you can see he can stop at will just like he could if he wanted with TV, or food. In this case there is no difference between his addiction to food and anyone's addiction to food. My question is simply why did you even bring it up if it means so little
