Quote:So what you're saying is that in order to believe in God, you have to have belief that he exists because it can't be proven that he does. What reason or motivation is there for me as a rational thinking person to believe in this story, in this being?

Why, as a self-proclaimed rational thinking person, would you believe in everyday miracles that people take for granted? You believe that you'll make it to work safely when you drive on the interstate in the morning hours, don't you? What makes you believe something so foolish? Because you have faith in your own abilities to drive? Faith in the abilities of others? Why is faith and believe in God any more foolish, as a rational thinking person, than faith in yourself? There is, after all, no proof that you're competent beyond what the medical authorities say.

And what makes their testimony about your competency believable? Faith?
