Probably the most interesting computer design that I've ever seen is at Cybernet. One of their models is a computer inside a keyboard, the other is a computer inside a monitor. It doesn't take up much room, though heat might be a problem. =/ And I don't think that the computers are extremely powerful either. You win some, you loose some.