Because I don't understand your point, and especially how it's relevant to this discussion.

You think I'm going to say I have "faith" in my driving abilities? You're incorrect. I don't have "faith" in them. I have previous experience as well as wisdom passed along by those who drove before me to help me drive defensively. I also make assumptions about those who share the road with me. While I assume most of them have the same desires as me, to get to our destinations, I also assume they are morons who might make a mistake or forget to look before changing lanes. This prior knowledge and assumption that people are idiots has kept me accident-free for the 8 years I've been driving.

That said, I don't know where that leads to faith in "God". I think I can guess where you might be going with that, and this line of logic might work on a child or a guy with an IQ of 90, but you're going to have to reach quite a bit deeper than that with me.
