Bush appointed Brown to be the head of FEMA even though Brown was dangerously underqualified for the job. The result was a lackluster response from Emergency Management and a natural resentment to the government.

Did Bush cause Katrina? No. But he did choose nepotism over responsible appointments, and it is a legitimate reason to be mad at Bush. If you become President of the United States, you owe it to the nation to appoint qualified people to positions of great responsibility, not (as Bush does all the time) offer positions to friends and firends of friends. It was irresponsible, and there were consequences.

now you can take out your frustration on Michael Moore, who is an easy target, or you can be mature enough to admit the Bush administration acted without the best interest of the American people in appointing Brown to FEMA, and for once (just once perhaps) admit the Bush administration makes mistakes.
