
Subject: Re: wol irc

Posted by light on Wed, 28 Dec 2005 03:30:16 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Rofl, he's at it again.

I can tell you EXACTLY why he posted asking this.

History:

Back when WOL was around, and there was no rule against bots, Quadra00 and a few others started making a bot that came to be known as CFGuard.

It was a mix of NGSGuard, CloudyServ and an IRCBot, and we had permission to use all 3.

The bot never got off the ground, but we did get a basic one going. It used a bot connection to use commands like !locate, !gi, !ip etc.

We put this version, which can only be described as a buggy beta up for download. nopic downloaded it, and went about renaming it to N-bot.

I can guarantee you it was a rip, because all the files were the same, just renamed, and my code and a couple of comment lines were left in.

Anyway, thats the history, now for the present:

nopic has teamed up with AmunRa, Dave4989 and sh0ck (and others)to form RenegadeX. (<http://www.amunra.net/renegadex/>)We know they (well, at least nopic) have re-ripped the bot, and are now calling it AG-REG. How do we know this? They joined our IRC network and tried hosting the bot there. It doesn't take any time for a creator to recognise his creation.

However, what nopic has just realised is that he needs to make the bot connection for that older version to work, which he obviously isn't smart enough to do. He is not "makeing a bot", he is trying to get a bot he ripped and has little idea about to work on XWIS.

Thankyou to all those who recognised this for what it really is and took swift action.
