Buckery wrote on Tue, 14 February 2006 12:33 Sometimes I think people just pretend that they are ignored by someone but they really are not. Usually some people want to read what other are saying even if you hate them. And leaving certain messages out could make a discussion not make sense.

Fixed for grammar and spelling errors, as well as changed to make more sense(or sence?)

Anyway, you are right, however. I sometimes feel that someone people post, or used to(cough cheekay cough) post so much garbage, that it is easier to just ignore them for the most part unless someone quotes them. (not that I have him ignored)

Please use the spell check next time, it is there to be used. If you don't have time to use it then I am surprised that you have time to post at all. There are no excuses for not using spell check.

Off topic: I also feel that people should stop quoting the posts above them, because it gets annoying, and it does not make you look very smart.
