You come to the realization that because you can see through all their clothing all the time, it's no longer special or exciting, but is commonplace. You feel unfulfilled and unsettled and begin to question what's really important in your life, but you never can figure out what would fill the void, and the question plagues you even till your death.

I wish that the next wish is granted in a non-ironic fashion.

Wish granted. Let's just hope that I am not lying.

I wish that this wish gets granted without a horrible result.
