"KIRBY098 French "pride" also stopped them from turning over vessels in Toulons that would have been used to liberate thier country. This fleet was the largest and most powerful on the mainland. Second only to Britains. Instead of honoring the British request to sail to Britain where they would be able to captian thier own vessels in the liberation fight, they scuttled thier own fleet, and refused to destroy the shipyards and equipment that Germany used to terrorize the North Atlantic.

I read a reliable book a while back and your little British friends threatrened to destroy any French ships that didn't surrender. So it was more of a threat then request. And we know the French mainly don't bow to threats. And I am glad of that point.
